MAYA Surbiton: National Finalist at the British Curry Awards 2010

For Immediate release:

MAYA Indian Restaurant in Surbiton was recognised for a second year running as a finalist at last night's prestigious British Curry Awards, which was held at the Grosvenor House Hotel in London.

The black tie event was hosted by comedian and presenter Justin Lee Collins and is by far the most coveted awards ceremony in the UK Curry Industry calendar. The event was attended by over 1500 restaurateurs, MPs, celebrity guests including the RT. Hon. ERIC PICKLES MP Secretary of State for Communities and Local Government and was recognised by HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN and PRIME MINISTER DAVID CAMERON.

Having been opened by brothers SHAMIM and SHAHIN MALEK only 18 months ago, MAYA has achieved the recognition that it deserves by offering superior quality food and maintaining a standard which is constantly being recognised as the best in the area and also as one of the finest restaurants in the UK. The food is created by master chefs who have worked in top London and international restaurants and by creating a venue that boasts the sophistication and elegance of any upper class City of London restaurant.

MAYAs proud owner Shamim Malek said "we are thrilled that we have again been recognised as one of the finest restaurants in the UK. Maintaining our high standards has been a difficult task with the current rising costs of raw materials and difficult economic situation, however receiving the accolade of being a finalist in this national category shows that we have succeeded in achieving our goal of providing outstanding food and service"

MAYAs proud owners are thrilled that they have been recognised as one of the UK's finest Indian restaurants for the second year running in the UK Newcomer category at the British Curry Awards and are thrilled at being one of the only restaurants to be recognised in whole of Surrey.
